Waterloo, Seneca County, June 13, 1869.

A few miles outside this curious little town, which nestles among the hills and lakes that dot this picturesque region, and within about thirty miles of Lake Ontario “as the crow flies,” stands an old meeting house, used for many years by the Hicksite Society of Friends. It is a large frame building, just off the dirt-road running through the town of Junius, and is situated upon an eminence within a fenced area, which encloses also a small whilom Quaker cemetery, comprising, perhaps, fifty graves. The house is probably thirty or forty years old, and its interior arrangement is in accordance with the rules of construction adopted by the Friends for their places of meeting. There are doors on three sides, or, more properly, at the front and both ends. A narrow platform, about two feet high, with a railing along the front and a low seat behind it, occupies the back interior of the meeting house, and a primitive gallery runs around three of the walls and is furnished with rude, straight-backed benches. The house has a front of about fifty feet and a depth of twenty-five, and may be divided inside into two compartments by elevating from the floor and lowering from the ceiling by pulleys a plank partition, built in sections, which slides in grooves, and which, when adjusted, as effectually separates each apartment from the other as a good panelled partition built stationary would do. This was used in former times to separate the males and females. The ground floor also is supplied with a number inspirations and promptings of the mind.

We do not flatter ourselves that this kingdom of light and redemption has already come, or is at the door. Long reaches of time may stretch between us and it; wearisome marches of humanity must needs be made ere the approach is possible. Arduous conflicts are yet to be fought; preachings there must be in the wilderness and ministries of manifold repentance. Great questions of labor, of social order, of the apportionment of the tasks of life, adjustment of the sanctions and rewards, the arranging of all the relations so that existence shall, for each individual, net the utmost for use, freedom, blessedness. These are looming up among us and lie unsolved. Many groan under the inequalities, and the full deliverance, however slowly and painful, is to be wrought out. Our country, in abolishing slavery, moved thereto in large part by the divine necessities, seems but to have just opened the questions that are to agitate, and perhaps to rock and convulse it for years and ages. The main battle remains yet to be fought; we have only thus far seen the first shots of the skirmish. A higher fidelity, a loftier devotion to truth and the absolute right is a pressing need, even among the Friends of Progress. Work, work, stern, unremitting, is and must be our allotment here. It is ever the same old world to live in, with its trials and pressures, and the advances marvellous, seen at intervals, as they may appear, are all wrought gradually through individual effort, often lone and unrewarded, through continuous sweat and toil. There are ever stakes to be contended for, and the amelioration is conditioned upon a steadfast fidelity of the true and chosen. Friends of Progress have quite other business to do than spend their lives singing paeans to progress, and glorifying and exulting in the good time coming. We may fall in our armor; we and our children after us may all die, not having received the promises. But, sure as there is faith on the earth and hands and hearts to labor and to suffer, the destiny shall not fail. The prophecy upon the iron leaf shall all be fulfilled. In the fulness of time it shall visit and illumine the world. We, therefore, take to ourselves and we bid you, our brothers, trust and cheer. The salvation is nearer than when first we believed. We will look and wait for the hour of man's majority, the full enfranchisement and peace. We will look for the religion that shall be perfect freedom and perfect faithfulness, the dispensation of truth and grace, that shall enrich, bless and hallow all our life—for the Church that shall be the church of humanity, with its communions and its sacraments of blessing, deep as the soul, broad as the world and rich as history. It must have the universe for its temple, normal human life for its orison, its psalm in the plenitude of that enrichment perhaps the name religion will pass away, and language find no word to describe a fact so large and all-sufficing, save it be the life, the beatitude of the soul.

Spiritualistic Testimony.

Discussion of this circular was then invited, upon which

Mr. Powell proceeded to remark that while he greatly admired the theory and principles enunciated in the letter of Mr. Mills, which it had been suggested by the President should go forth, if adopted, as the address or circular of the meeting, still he felt constrained to say that he could not endorse the expressions contained in it with reference to Spiritualism. Spiritualism was not the creation of a day, nor was it unreal, a thing without substance. He felt that there was before him a world of unexplored mystery and of beatitude, which his spirit would explore and in which it would linger, and that after this life there was a personal immortality beyond. That hope of personal immortality was the sublimest hope he enjoyed, the anticipation of a realization of the purest aspirations of the soul.

Mr. Douglass, at the close of Mr. Powell's remarks, which were somewhat lengthy and delivered with great fluency and clear and elegant expression, said he "didn't see" this idea of Spiritualism. It wasn't by any means satisfactory to him. He had nothing to say against the views of other persons on the subject, but merely wished to record his testimony against the theory as at present advanced. He wasn't going to say that other people had not good reason to believe in it; they must be different to him, though. Perhaps they could see more or see clearer. He would admit, however, that whatever a man believed was true—true to the man who believed it just as much as any fact, however apparent, to other individuals. But that was no reason why it was true to those who did not believe it. Of course if a man who believes in Spiritualism says that he has actually seen the spirit, or does now see the spirit of a person who is really and honestly dead, it was hard to dispute that assertion. But he did not see it for all that and never had. People had told him some things about spirits and had asked him some things he could not answer when he denied their assertions, but it was easy to ask a question another man could not answer. A person once called up a spirit and claimed to hold intercourse with it in his presence, and said it was the spirit of his (Douglass') grandmother.

Mr. Douglass here broke out into a good-natured giggle, which set the meeting folk tittering, and continued:—Well, I said it wasn't my grandmother, and he (this person who "called up" the spirit) finished me off by sayin', "Well, if it isn't your grandmother who is it?" Of course he had me there—(laughter)—'cause he had asked me a question I couldn't answer! All that I can say is that I have never known of a case where any person who was honestly dead ever came back again. I own up that once I saw a ghost. It was the ghost of a person I had been acquainted with and who had been dead for some time. But I was in a place that was intimately associated with recollections of him, and my mind was on him, and I had been thinking very deeply about him, when all at once he appeared to me. Well, I know what that was. I saw him in my mind and believed it was him; but it was all owing to time and place, and coincidence and condition. Therefore I say that whatever a man believes is true, just as true as anything can be to him, whether it is real or unreal, and however real a thing may be in fact it is not true to any one who does not believe it, because he has no faith in it under the condition in which it may be presented.

Mr. Mills argued that we were in the midst of a world of mystery—mysteries which it was not in the power of human imagination to fathom. But science was now making such rapid strides that there was some promise of these mysteries being unveiled to us in time. He was not prepared to accept or to admit Spiritualism. He simply knew that he was here, but could say nothing about the infinite life beyond the grave, and he took it that beyond that we should not get much further, and while doing the duties of the hour we shall do well to trust in the infinite Father for what lies without and beyond.

Mr. Powell said that there were plenty of high evidences of the reality of the substantial existence of Spiritualism. Wendell Phillips, it was well known, had been confined in the cabinet of the Davenport Brothers, and had actually felt the hands and arms which had been presented. So he himself had stated; and he had stated further, that there was no duplicity about it. Professor Denton also asserted that he had taken models of "appearances," of actual limbs in clay.

The President said, that while concurring in the general tone and sentiment of Mr. Mills' letter, he felt that he could not accept its principles regarding spiritualism. The letter was here, however, for discussion and for the action of the meeting to adopt or amend it.

Several persons expressed themselves as of the opinion that the document should rather be promulgated as the address of Mr. Mills than amended by the insertion of views which were not his.

In opposition to this the ground was taken that the document having been accepted by the meeting, was the property of the meeting and was no longer in Mr. Mills' hands.

After some further discussion the meeting adjourned till Sunday (this) morning, after the singing of a song by Miss Bowen, assisted by Mr. James S. Boughton.

The Last Day's Meeting,

to-day, was somewhat more largely attended, not less than two hundred persons being present. In former years the last day of the meeting, usually occurring on the Sabbath, was generally marked by the attendance of large crowds of visitors, many of whom undoubtedly attended from mere idle curiosity, sometimes leading to slight confusion, and filling not only the building but the space surrounding it.

The proceedings this morning were opened by singing, after which Mr. Stebbins made a brief address in response to some of the views advanced in the discussion of the previous day. He took the ground that there were some things in the world which did not require argument to prove their existence, and yet they were as substances intangible. They were great vital powers and influences which underlie our natures, our very being, our existence. No one would attempt to argue against the existence of the essential existence of justice, a principle without tangible existence, save as it is developed in the exercise of

SPIRIT-ART.

By Emma Hardinge.

One of the most remarkable phases of spiritual influence upon mortals is exhibited in the strange, and often incomprehensible, drawings which are produced through media, without (as they allege) any design or volition of their own. When the influence to draw takes the form of floral groups, landscapes, figures, or the still more significant shape of spirit-portraits, it is not difficult to appreciate the work that is accomplished. Geological charts of rare exactitude have thus been produced through unlearned media, proving the amount of invisible intelligence that was directing the performance. The likenesses of deceased persons sketched through the hands of total strangers are amongst the most conclusive evidences that the controlling intelligence must have found the originals in the spheres of immortality. The flowers and landscapes executed in this way, although, as it is affirmed by the sneering critic, often deficient in the conventionalities of ordinary routine art, are nevertheless, in most instances, interwrought with a delicacy, precision, three hundred public and private mediums in this city, and six hundred in other parts of the State.

Tickets good for the boat leaving Saturday, Monday or Tuesday night, at 5 P. M. and to return from Boston until Monday night, September 16th.

VICTORIA C. WOODHULL,
Pres. Am. Association of Spiritualists.

Approved:

W. F. PARKER, Ag't N. and N. Y. Trans. Co.

Those contemplating attending the forthcoming National Convention, either from New York or points accessible to it, will do well to note the provisions of the above announcement, which is as will be seen, endorsed by the Agent of the line.

Let every local society in the country perceive the importance of being represented in this Convention, that the meeting may be not only a pleasant occasion for memory, but a time for active inquiry into the best methods of promulgating the truth, as we have received it, to humanity.

The Ninth National Convention of Spiritualists.

John A. Andrew Hall, Boston, will be on September 10th, 11th and 12th, the scene of the ninth annual assembling of the Spiritualist Association, and it is to be hoped also the birth-place of new resolves, coupled with acts for the good of our heaven-sent cause. From various quarters information reaches us which seems to indicate that the present Convention will come together with an earnest desire to work for the right, and its delegates will represent the solid, practical men and women of their localities.

In an article headed “Retrospection,” in a recent number of the Religio-Philosophical Journal, Dr. H. T. Child sums up the history of the preceding convocations, as follows:

“There have been eight annual sessions of the National Association—few in numbers, yet in some degree representatives of Spiritualism in the various sections of our country. The American Association has never claimed to be an authoritative body. Its members realize that they are responsible for their acts and utterances. Having attended all except the first, which was a mass-meeting at Chicago, we are satisfied that there has been a progression with each year, and that the institution, without assuming any authority or dictatorship over any, is doing a work; and while those whose only knowledge of it is from hearsay, may pronounce it ‘a failure,’ and inform the world that ‘it is dead,’ it will move steadily on, and continue to do its work.”

We earnestly hope, whatever may be the action of this Convention, as regards that sharp-drawn individuality which characterizes the spiritual movement, that in and through all, the golden thread of progress beheld by Dr. Child in the past history of the movement may run, and that its members—even if involuntarily—may “drift toward the angel side.”

The following delegates to this Convention were chosen Wednesday afternoon, Sept. 4th, at the Banner of Light Free Circle Room, by the Executive Committee of the Massachusetts State Spiritualist Association: Lysander S. Richards, Quincy; William Denton, Wellesley; I. C. Ray, New Bedford; Edwin Wilder, Hingham; A. E. Newton, Arlington; I. P. Greenleaf, Medford; Dr. H. B. Storer, John Wetherbee, A. E. Carpenter, Boston; A. C. Robinson, Lynn; W. W. Currier, Bradford; Calvin Haskell, Chelsea; Hebron Libby, Cambridge; Abbie K. T. Rounseville, Middleboro’.

further spread to the principles and truths of Spiritualism, and that this Convention will give special attention and time to these subjects, in preference to speech-making or the consideration of other questions.

Wednesday Afternoon—The usual conference time was occupied by A. E. Carpenter and Dr. Randolph. Voted that the election of officers be made the order of business, on Thursday, at 11 A. M. The first regular address was then delivered by Mr. Geo. A. Bacon. The choir sang “The Evergreen Shore.” William Denton was then introduced as the second speaker, and delivered a very effective discourse on the general subject of Spiritualism, to an audience completely filling the hall. Singing by the choir. Mr. Giles submitted the following resolution, and moved that it be made the subject of discussion:

Resolved, That the American Association of Spiritualists hereby declare that religious, political, and social freedom are the fundamental principles of all improvement in human life.

Carried.

An earnest debate ensued, participated in by Mr. Giles, Mrs. Hoadley, Mrs. Laura Cuppy Smith, Dr. P. B. Randolph, Wm. Denton, John Wetherbee, Mrs. Woodhull, Dr. H. B. Storer, Mrs. Albertson, Miss Lizzie Doten, and A. A. Wheelock, who moved that the resolution be referred to a committee of seven. Carried. The Chair appointed, as that committee, Mr. Wheelock, Miss Doten, Mr. Denton, Mrs. Woodhull, Mrs. Laura Cuppy Smith, A. E. Newton, and H. B. Storer. The discussion, which consumed so large a portion of this afternoon, from the character and ability of its many participants, proved to be one of the most interesting feature of the entire Convention.

Wednesday Evening—The conference time, under the chairmanship of Dr. Child, was occupied by Moses Hull, Miss Helen Grover and A. C. Robinson. Singing by the choir. Mrs. Laura Cuppy Smith was then introduced as the first regular speaker of the evening. Her remarks were confined mainly to a consideration of the social question. Mrs. Woodhull, who was announced as the second speaker, proceeded to deliver an elaborate address on the “Religion of Humanity,” which will be published in a future issue. [At the close of Mrs. Woodhull’s address, a lady came privately forward, and announcing herself to be the sister of George A. Redman, presented Mrs. W. with a diamond ring.] Song by the choir. Mrs. Middlebrook, on being introduced as the third and last speaker of the evening, stated her subject to be “Spiritualism and its Side Issues,” which proved to be a very popular lecture. Adjourned.

THIRD DAY.

Thursday Morning—The conference hour was occupied by L. K. Coonley, I. C. Ray, Mrs. Hoadley, Mrs. Laura Cuppy Smith and others.

The Business Committee submitted their report for the order of the day. Accepted. A communication was received from Mr. J. W. Seaver, which was read and referred to Committee on Organization.

The Treasurer’s Report, as follows, was read and accepted:

"Reformatory Lecturers," Woodhull & Claflin's Weekly (New York), August 16;
"Directory of Social Freedom," August 30

In view of the determination recently manifested by certain would-be authorities in Spiritualism, and from a sincere desire to promote their expressed purposes, to set up a distinction that will produce a free and a muzzled rostrum; we shall henceforth publish in this list the names and addresses of such speakers, now before the public and hereafter to appear, as will accept no engagement to speak from any committee or arrangement, with any proviso whatever, as to what subject they shall treat, or regarding the manner in which it shall be treated. A reformatory movement, such as Spiritualism really is, cannot afford so soon to adopt the customs of the Church and fall into its dotage. On the contrary, it demands an unflinching advocacy of all subjects upon which the Spirit world inspires their mediums under the absolute freedom of the advocate. To all those speakers who wish to be understood as being something above the muzzled ox which treads out the corn, this column is now open:

C. Fannie Allyn, Stoneham, Mass.
J. I. Arnold, Clyde, O.
Rev. J. O Barrett, Battle Creek, Mich.
